the bravest men in the army, to be brought before him. At the passage of the Lech he waved the life of his captain, who, a few days previously, had reduced him to the ranks. His Majesty gave him the Legion of Honour.

11th, Augsburg:

The array of Prince Ferdinand is outflanked, and Prince Murat with the dragoons and the corps of Marshal Latiues and Marshal Ncy is pursuing him. Marshal Bernadotte should reach Munich to-day.

l&th. The Austrian army is completely demoralized, Our worst regiments of chasseurs attack, with odds against them, heavy cuirassier regiments and rout them; the infantry make, no stand at all.

(To Josephine.) My army holds Munich. On one .side the enemy are beyond the Inn; I have the other army of 60,000 men penned on the lller. The enemy are beaten and don't know what they are about. It alt looks like the most successful, the shortest, and the most brilliant campaign, ever fought. I start in one hour for Bureau.

(To Marshal Soult.) To-night, 5f my information from Munich warrants it, I shall move one of Davout'M clivi» sions to Landberg, where it will be nt your dinpowil, See that your aide-de-camp* and adjutants kill their horses. It is not a question of defeating the enemy, but of not a single man escaping. When you reach Mem-mingen assemble your generals and tell them that I expect, in such important drcunwtaneea, thai nothing will be left undone that can make mtr mjra«?« more complete and more absolute; that the event must be ten times more glorious than Marengo, and that in the nuwt remote agea posterity mu«t relate what t*nch one of them aeeomplished;
